The book includes two collections of short stories. "Collection I: Fairy Tales Do Come True", "Collection II: What Satan Told".

Collection I. The world-famous compiler of exciting stories, Baron Munchausen, praised this book. The great master said the following: "I never thought that my contemporaries and countrymen, the Ukrainian hasids, could invent and tell such skillful narratives!" The Baron went on to remark that in his opinion the stories should be called "Absolutely Incredible Stories", so that by this they might be distinguished from his own absolutely truthful opuses.

The astute reader, according to Munchausen, will undoubtedly recognize the serious intentions behind the humorous title.

Collection II. Perhaps not everyone knows that Satan is an angel, and an angel of high rank in the hierarchy of the Heavenly Host. The narration is in the first person, that is, on behalf of Satan.

The author hopes to please lovers of humor and amuse the reader with the stories of Satan.
