

The Naboth's Vineyard

Buy now

The king's wife loved flowers, but she had no land to grow them. There was a peasant's vineyard adjoining the king's house. She thought she should buy this land and make a flower garden. The king offered the farmer profitable terms. But the peasant did not behave in the way the royal couple expected him to. In the clash of interests, evil triumphed, and the story ended tragically. The narrative uses the motifs of the Biblical legend of the Naboth vineyard.

The plot, mostly fictionalized by the author, is turned by him into a detective story and described according to the laws of this genre. The author based his narrative on various information from literature and the Internet. An important folklore source "The Legends of the Jews" by Louis Ginzberg (in Hebrew) and "To Kill and Inherit" by Daniel Friedman (in Hebrew) was used.

This novel is published on several literary and library websites, such as "Barnes and Noble," "Apple Books," "Smashwords," and others. An audio book is published on the "Apple Books" website.

You can contact me via email (the best part) or social media.